

Information on Adverse Event Reporting

Protect confidentiality of everyone involved (medical or other facilities, person's names—name of the “injured” or “potentially injured” party; the person(s) giving out the questionable or detrimental information. If the person giving out the questionable or potentially damaging advice has professional credentials and is not a Registered/Licensed Dietitian, note this information, but do not put in the name of the person.) Must be able to verify the information.

Simply tell the story of what happened (patient using a product(s) or following advice; what the advice giver said, what resulted or could have resulted.) It is OK to use tech language. Could include a statement such as “Any dietitian would have known that using “X” or doing “X” would cause “Y.”

If there are financial implications, explain those (if product(s) cost is a factor; if the person ended up needing to be hospitalized; had to make a trip to a doctor, etc.; then there is an unneeded cost to the patient and possibly related parties).

State why this was unsound advice or product recommended –why this was a danger or potential danger.

1. Please document your experience of harm in 500 words or less. Please include the date of the occurrence.

2. Please include any history relevant to adverse event.

3. Please provide your contact information. This information will only be shared with the Consumer Protection Coordinator: Misti Leyva, PhD, RD/LD
